TARGETS AT A FESTIVAL

PEOPLE WHO SHOT AND DANCED WITH THE HADLER CLUB.

Piente of St. Monien's Conference of the Vincent de Paul Society-A Compli-mentary Benefit to Henry Hell-The Lexington Association of Surface Rallway

The Hadler Club, an organization composed of citizens who were former residents of the North German provinces, held their shooting contest and summer festival at Washington Park yesterday and last night. Sixty-six prizes, valued at $1,000, were given out, some of the fortunate winners being Chris Rahm, William Liebeck, H. H. Becker, H. T. Kahrs and J. H. Fischer. Prof. A. Lederhaus and his band played for the dancers in the evening. The grand march was led by J. F. Blohm and wife. Among those present were:

PRESENTATION TO A KNIGHT TEMPLAR. Sir Joseph A. Britton Honored by His Com

rades of Manhattan Commandery. At the last couclave of Manhattan Commandery, Knights Templar, No. 31, Eminent Sir Joseph A. Britton was surprised upon retiring from the honorable position of Eminent Commander with a presentation from the members of the commandery.

1) Eminent Commander Raymond, in a neat little speech, handed to Knight Britton an elaborate gold and red enamelled cross. Nestling in the centre of a white enamel Maltese cross was a two-carat diamond, and on the ribbon and gold pins were a cross and crown and the name of the commandery.

On the obverse side was the inscription "Presented to Eminent Sir Joseph A. Britton by the Sir Knights of Manhattan Commandery, K. T., No. 31, New York City, as a token of their esteem for him as a man and a brother, Sept. 12, 1888."

Eminent Sir Britton responded feelingly as soon as he recovered from the great surprise, and a banquet at O'Neil's followed with speeches and plenty of good cheer. Mr. Britton is very popular among Masons.

This Man Was Not Always a " Semetimes Cateror.

People who frequent Exchange place, in the vicinity of New street, cannot have failed to have observed an old negro, dressed in an exaggerated costume, with a great crowd of urchins gathered about him.

He is a queer old chap. His broad expanse of bosom is covered with a clean, white apron, and perched on his head a large, fourcornered baker's cap, made of white linen. He comes down about 10 o'clock every morning. In one hand is a big tin boiler full of coffee, while the other holds a basket of food of a more solid nature. Attached to the basket is a sign which reads:

Here I come again! ALL KINDS OF SANDWICHES, PIE AND CARE. CHICKEN AND TURKEY,

The "Sometimes" is in very small letters. After he had fed the multitude of small boys down there, he removes to Newspaper Row, and, joining his wife, who runs a lemonade and cake stand in front of the Franklin statue, they get their "fine work" in on the stomachs of the newsboys.

This old man conducts his business something similar to Mrs. Lamadrid, of the St. Andrew's Kitchens, by seiling his "feed" at one cent. But there the similarity ends, for while Mrs. L. sells cheaply as an act of philanthropy, the o. m. is grasping for the cold.

time he and his wife conducted a laundry on Sixth avenue.

It is said that the old man was then in the habit of wearing his patrons' best white linen shirts, and that during the cheerless blasts of winter he would carry enough underwear to "sweat a cold."

But he was always good-natured, and when a customer "kicked" against his thoughtlessness in not providing a clean shirt for Sunday, he always had a jolly remark ready to ease his patron's wrath.

Brooklyn Bridge to Figure on a Big Piece of Canvas.

Passing by the door of a studio in the Sherwood, the attention of an Evening World man was caught by an enormous frame covered with canvas. The back was towards the door, so what was painted on the canvas could not be seen. But the size of it was sufficient to rivet attention. It was larger sufficient to rivet attention. It was larger than Rosa Bonheur's picture of "The Horse Fair," at the Metropolitan.

Tapping on the door two or three times the newspaper man received no answer, those within were so interested in their work; so he stepped into the studio and around the end of the large canvas. A tall, stout man, with a bushy beard, was standing in front of the picture, and at a little distance was the artist's assistant, examining a photograph. The artist was M. Emil Renouf, whose pictures have excited a good deal of interest in New York art circles and in America generally.

"May I take a look at your painting, M. Renouf?" asked the visitor. "Certainly," answered the genial French-

"Certainly," answered the genial Frenchman.

The subject was the Brooklyn Bridge. The picture was entirely laid in and the general color scheme was indicated, but much remained to be done before the work is completely finished. One end of the bridge recedes away from the spectator and the structure stands out against a rich sunset sky, of the most brilliant coloring.

The picture will be hung in the Eden Musée, when it is done, and probably will excite more interest than any picture which has been exhibited there.

It is a picture which calls for much skill, especially when carried out on such a huge scale. M. Renouf has made numerous studies of the bridge, and has several photographs of it from different points.

The Wedding Ring Grew Tight in Spite of Its Pleasant Memories.

Travelling on a Third avenue surface car one morning the attention of an Evening Worth observer was attracted to a man who same hand was a circular mark, whiter than the rest of the skin, and having something the appearance of a burn. There was a slight scratch on the top of the circular mark.

The man noticed the eye of the reporter fixed on that mark, and, smiling, he held out his hand and turned around the ring. On the side which had been underneath the ring was a diagonal cut through the ring about as wide as the file-blade of a penknife is thick.

'I had to have the ring filed off the finger this morning," the man said. 'It had got so tight that it hurt me too much to wear it on that finger. I couldn't got it off, so the jeweler filed through it and pulled it off that way. He scratched me a little bit."

'It looks like a wedding ring," remarked the reporter.

"It looks like a wedding ring," remarked the reporter.

"It is, I put it on seven years ago on my wedding day, and it has never left my finger till this morning."

"Did you have a superstitious feeling about removing it?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, no. Not a superstitious feeling," said the man. "It was simply a question of sentiment. I am a Swede, and I don't think Swedes are very superstitious."

He gave the ring a little twist on his finger, and just then the newspaper man had to get off, leaving him eyeing it with a look of pleasant memories awakened by the sight of the simple hoop of gold.

"Lucky man, to whom his wedding ring brings feelings of delight seven years after," said the reporter to himself.

M'CAFFREY TALKS FIGHT.

He Declares Himself Willing to Fight All the Good Ones.

Pugilist McCaffrey was about town, last night, declaring his willingness to meet Dempsey, Mitchell, Kilrain or Sullivan. If the California Athletic Club fails to get Mitchell and Dempsey together, why would not McCaffrey be a good substitute as an op-ponent for the Nonpareil? Dominick says he isn't satisfied that Dempsey is his master, and the offer of a good purse for a finish fight with the challenger of big and little would settle whether he really is seeking for fight.

The California Athletic Club is going to settle no end of big pretentions to champion-ship form with its offers of big purses for fights that have got to be finished.

The new Amateur Athletic Union has jus issued a book of rules for all branches of amateur sport. It is a very comprehensive pamphlet.

DRAMATIC CHIT-CHAT GROWS BRIGHT WITH THE GROWING SEASON.

Roland Reed and McVicker-Sothern Presented with His Father's Picture-A Roston View of "A Possible Case"-When The Henrietta" Will Come Back-Johnny Wild Is Meeting with Success.

The engagement of Roland Reed at the Bijou Opera-House will close Sept. 30, when Barry and Fay will appear at that house, producing their farcical piece, "McKenna's Flirtation," which they are playing this week at the Lee Avenue Academy of Music, Brooklyn, E. D. This is a play dealing with New York life d la Harrigan. Barry and Fay represent two Irishmen who have become suddenly wealthy and who are great friends. Difficulties arise, owing to the fact that one of the Hibernians is of the opinion that the other is carrying on a firtation with his wife. A duel, fought in the neighborhood of the Harlem River, is the result. The parlor scene, or "McKenna's Flirtation," in which a reception takes place, affords opportunities for the usual songs and dances which will be interpreted by specially engaged people for the New York opening. Roland Reed will play "The Woman Hater" through the country. He was very successful with it last season.

E. B. Jack, Roland Reed's manager, tells the following story of the comedian: Some seasons ago Reed was the first comedian in McVicker's Theatre, in Chicago. It was customary to play an opera company during a portion of the season, during which time the stock company went on the road. On these occasions the bill generally consisted of drama and a farce. Ted McVicker would play the old men, and Reed the young men. The old gentleman, it is said, was horribly jealous of Reed, who caused most of the laughter. One night at Elgin, Ill., during one of Reed's principal scenes, which was always greeted with shouts of laughter. McVicker began to rattle the "thunder" effect, which drowned all Reed's efforts. The comedian was not disconcerted. As soon as the noise ceased he walked quickly to the footlights, and said to the audience, "McVicker is outside, try-ing to steal my thunder." It was the hit of the evening.

Miss Minnie Seligman and E. J. Henley are to appear at the Star Theatre in the Mc-Vicker-Albaugh production of "A Midsummer-Night's Dream." Miss Seligman, who played the entire summer in Chicago with this company, has won a great deal of popularity in that city.

E. H. Sothern was yesterday presented with a handsome painting representing the elder Sothern. Theodore Moss was the giver. The painting came into Mr. Moss's possession over twenty years ago and has been carefully guarded. Mr. Moss expressed great pleasure at young Sothern's success.

Robson and Crane have just signed a contract by which they will appear at the Broadway Theatre for five or six weeks at the end of the season, producing, of course, "The Henrietta." Their regular season begins Oct. 1 at the Lelan! Opera-House in Albany. They thought of appearing in New York at the Fifth Avenue 'Theatre, but Nat Goodwin has "the call at that house." He goes there in March, with the privilege of staying as long as he finds it profitable. Mr. Goodwin, by the bye, has just concluded an enormous week's business in Minneapolis.

One or two of the Boston papers resent the announcement that "A Possible Case" is the legitimate successor of Bronson Howard's play, "The Henrietta." The Bostonians like "A Possible Case," but it seems that they are of the opinion that comparisons are not advisable.

Charles E. Scott, jr., writes this to The Evening World : "At the Manhattan Athletic Club a colored boy ran two races with two athletes, and upon inquiry I learned that he won the first race, which was 100 yards, in 10½ seconds, leaving his mair about two yards behind. In the second race he waited for his man to catch him and they came in abreast, it being a dead heat in 10 2.5 seconds. When it is looked into that is very good time the season here we shall have 'The Bunch of Keys'-that comes next week-'The Lights o'London,' The Wages of Sin,' Littie Corinne. 'Hoodman Blind,' The Shadows of a Great City,' the Kimball Opera Company, 'Skipped by the Light of the Moon,' James H. Wallick in 'A Bandit King,' 'Hazel Kirke, and 'Lost in New York.' There is plenty of variety there." Mr. Seymour said that Mr. Jacobs opens his Lyceum Theatre, at Montrose avenue and Leonard street, Williamsburg, Oct. 1. It is a smaller house than the Brooklyn Theatre and in a very populous neighborhood, so that much success is anticipated for it. This house will give Mr. Jacobs the control of twenty-five theatres. He has nine companies on the road. the season here we shall have 'The Bunci

"Little Lord Fauntleroy" has made a hit in Boston. At any rate, the papers are gushing over little Else Leslie, who is known in this city as Editha, of Lyceum Theatre fame. "Little Lord Fountieroy" is to follow "The Kaffir Diamond" at the Broadway Theatre. Louis Aldrich and his melodrama are booked for eight weeks. Little Elsie will be seen in the piece, Tommy Russell relieving ther occasionally.

Newton Gotthold, who died on Wednesday, was contemplating a New York engagement next season, with the idea of bringing out a new play of his own, and afterwards taking it through the country.

Mrs. Potter's company is now engaged and rehearsals will be begun next week. The arrival of Kyrle Bellew and Harry Edwards is expected shortly. Harry Edwards will act as stage manager. This will be the first time he has travelled through a regular season for years. Mrs. Potter's season opens at the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, Oct. 8, in "Twixt Axe and Crown."

A. P. Dunlop is very candid. His Stage News is a year old to-day, and he explains its existence in an extremely deferential man-ner. "It is simply a letter sent exclusively to the dramatic editors of the best news-papers in America, Canada, England and France. Nor should there be any mystery about its publication, which is paid for by those it benefits. There is no philanthropy at all about it." But Mr. Dunlop's paper is bright and well written, and that which it contains is eminently reliable.

"Nero's" season ends on Saturday night on Staten Island. The announcement that this was to be the last week sent a large number of people nightly to the show who but recently returned to town.

Marcus Mayer is expected in this city on Sunday. He will at once begin arrange-ments for the appearance of Coquelin, who is to follow McCaull at Wallack's.

YOM KIPIUR.

The Great Hebrew Day of Atonement Begins at Sunset-Its Observance.

Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, begins at sunset this evening and lasts till sunset to-morrow. This is one of the oldest and most solemn of Hebrew solemnities, and it has been observed for centuries with the greatest fidelity.

During the twenty-four hours of the Yom Rippur not a mor-el of food is eaten nor a drop of liquid drunk. Services of an impressive character are held in the symmogues, be ginning with the prayer of Kol Nidre, which is thrice chanted by the precentor. It is a day of atonement for sins and forgiveness of injuries.

injuries. In orthodox Hebrew families a taper is kept burning in a cup of oil during the day, sym-bolizing the oil of charity and the fire of love, besides recalling the lamp that burns in the sauctuary.

"My child! My lost Lena!"

When, at length, she related her story, no doubt was left in the mind of either of the delighted parents that she was their missing child.

She was known, she said, by the name of Florence Hopeton, and her earliest recollections were of her father—or one whom she had supposed to be her father.

He was killed in attempting to alight from a steam-car while in motion. Mark Hopeton's last word had been:

"Tell Florence she is not my child."

He had tried to say more, but died with the words u aspoken.

Although her early life had been one of cheerless toil she had grown up a good and beautiful girl, of whom her parents had reason to be proud, and they took her to their hearts and home to make amends for her previous trials by bestowing upon her all the delights it is in the power of love and wealth to gave or in the hearts of fond parents to suggest.

She little understood the man she had con-quered and she expected to discard him as easily as she had others, but when she was forced to listen to his impassioned expres-sions of love—and then, when he discovered himself to have been the dupe of her designs, to his threatened vengeance—her cowardly heart was indeed frightened into repentance for her reprehensible conduct.

Five years went by, and in the cosy sitting-room of a handsome cottage, situated in the suburbs of the city of B——, a young mother sat in a low chair, singing 301t, sweet lulla-bys to the little one she clasped so fondly in

When the time came for retiring Mrs. Elwood carried her little one up stairs and placed her in the crib that stood close by her bedside, for she had never allowed her to be removed from her a single night since her birth.

When the night was far advanced and the whole household was wrapped in slumber, the dark form of a man cautiously ascended by means of a rope-ladder to the balcony.

Having unfastened the window by inserting his hand through an aperture from which he had removed a pane of glass, he noiselessly cast into the room some huge sponges, thoroughly saturated with chloroform.

Having waited a short time for the sportific vapor to take effect, he carefully entered the apartment, and bore the little one from her mother's bedside without disturbing her deep repose.

Mr. Elwood was the first to recover consciousness, at a late hour the following morning, and the first object on which her gaze rested was the empty crib.

Springing to her feet, she gazed, horror, stricken, around the room; and then, going to the window, she saw the missing pane of

With one long piercing wail of anguish she fell down, unterly oblivious, for a while at least, to the depth of her sorrow.
For several weeks her life was despaired of;

see no fault in anything she did, whatever others might think of her conduct; and, though she was termed a coquette, it mattered not to him, as he considered it only a manifestation of envy or spite towards one who was so much admired and sought after.

When Mark Hopeton, whose parents were residents of the same village as her own, returned home from college, she was pleased with the stylish young student and secretly resolved that he, too, must become a victim to her fascinations. She little understood the man she had con-

years, and the child on whom she layished such affection was the result of that union.
